"THE WHITE OUTLAW"

A Real Blue Streak Western

Starring Jack Hoxie

Jim Hill, the rascally foreman of a neighboring ranch, has insinuated that Jack Lepton knows something about some horses that have been stolen. Jack advances the theory that the horses have been lured to the mountain flats by a beautiful thoroughbred white stallion of his that escaped from him and turned outlaw. To prove his innocence, he ventures his horse. The animal is captured in the act of setting free again.

Jim Hill, the rascally foreman of a neighboring ranch, has insinuated that Jack Lupton knows something about some horses that have been stolen. Jack advances the theory that the horses have been lured to the mountain flats by a beautiful thoroughbred white stallion of his that escaped from him and turned outlaw. To prove his innocence, he recaptures his horse. The animal is condemned to die, but Jack sets it free again.

The foreman plots to stampede the herd of strayed horses over the border and is overheard by the negro cook, who sends a posse after the rustlers. Mary Gale, Jack's sweetheart, who has ridden to the mountains to warn him, is caught in the stampede. He reaches her in time to throw her into a ditch and the herd runs over them without touching them. The foreman is arrested and Jack and the girl are betrothed.
